

SIGNS ON ALL CITY STREETS

1000 Standards Being Erected For Blue and White Street Signs.

For the first time in the history of El Paso, the city streets are to be marked with street signs. Standards are now being erected at each street intersection in the city and 1000 of these standards are to be placed throughout the city. On these galvanized iron standards, which are 3 1/2 feet high, will be placed signs telling the names of the streets forming the intersection. These signs will be white on a blue background and will be sufficiently large for them to be seen from the street car or auto. On the streets upon which street car lines run there will be two standards erected and on each will be placed the names of the streets, in order that they may be seen from either side of a street car. On all of the other streets only one standard will be placed.

Four Signs on Post.
The new street signs will be placed on the tops of the standards in such a way that they may be seen from four directions. Each sign will have two sides painted and the street name will show on both sides. This will give 4000 street signs on 1000 uprights and will furnish a complete system of street naming for all of the incorporated city. The signs will cost $5000 and are expected to be in place by July 1. The work is being done under the direction of city engineer George Barry, by the city engineer's department.

The car, at the second incline, and then started and climbed the hill in "high." This is considered "some stunt" for a six, when it is considered that the car "picked up" practically all the way up the hill.

RED'S PRIVATE CAR.

"Ah, yes, they cause us much sorrow. These people, who," some of us say, "who won't put off till tomorrow the trouble they can make today."

RED MESAM, the hardest man in Tin Can alley, boarded a crowded Doberly street trolley with Scorch, the sickliest bulldog in Puggy O'Leary's halfbreed. "You can't ride in this car with that dog," said the conductor. "No, kick him off; this is no cattle car," said the conductor. "Hush mit em," cried the passengers, many of whom were of German descent. "If you don't want this dawg here put him off—I give youse permission," said Red Mesam.

"Here goes!" cried the conductor. "Lead a hand on, old man; lend some hands, passengers!"

During the rest of the journey, Red Mesam managed the car from the motor-man's stool, while Scorch remained outside on the conductor's platform, frightening the wits out of the would-be passengers, who tried to get aboard. The car was empty.
